NUEDEXTA Patient Video: Carol

Carol: Hi, my name is Carol and I have Pseudobulbar Affect as a result of a traumatic brain injury. I am a high school librarian; so, I get this huge fire safe because we have all the old yearbooks going back to 1930 – it's so big I was actually inside of the safe and I backed out and it had a low door and I whacked my head so hard and the crying started after my injury.

Carol: Uncontrollable crying is – it's – a difficult to explain how draining that can be.

Carol: I was sent to therapies, like occupational therapy, and they asked me to come back when I could stop crying because I couldn't get through a session. Another doctor sent me back to work. Imagine teaching a class and you are so worried that you are going to cry in front of 30 teenagers – the stress from not knowing when an episode would come on.

Tim: When the brain injury happened, all she wanted to do was avoid people. "Let me be."

Carol's Husband // Caregiver

Carol: My husband and I would be in the supermarket and I'd have to run for the car. And, one time we're in the diner and I ran out crying.

Tim: Carol and I would go to this New Year's Eve party, every year, but after she had her traumatic brain injury and she was continuously crying, she wouldn't feel like going out.

The Impact of PBA

Carol: You don't want to be in public having these episodes because it's embarrassing and it was – it was – a very difficult time.

Carol: There were a lot of unknowns through this journey for me. Each month I would get so excited to go to the doctor and like they were going to finally have answers and the only answer was, "you know, you'll feel better soon," "you'll feel better soon," but the crying wasn't subsiding.

Journey to PBA Diagnosis

Carol: I saw a neuropsychiatrist who put me on a series of anti-depression medicines but I couldn't stop crying and I was crying and crying uncontrollably and I couldn't figure it out. Now you can see where the confusion gets in with having depression – I just couldn't control why I was crying.

Carol: I just started to feel people started to doubt me, not take me seriously, maybe even thought I was faking it – nobody would ever choose to live like this.

Living with PBA

Carol: About that time, my sister who is a nurse – and she's married to a doctor – and they have a friend who is a neurologist, and she got me in to see him. He evaluated all the medications that I was currently taking; after spending time with me and listening to my symptoms, he examined me and then he diagnosed me with Pseudobulbar Affect and said that there is medication for this called NUEDEXTA. He wanted me to be fully aware that there were side effects including diarrhea, dizziness, cough, vomiting, weariness and ankle swelling. Since I've been on NUEDEXTA, I have fewer episodes; there's less fear that I'm going to – you know – embarrass myself at dinner with friends or that I won't be able to do something.

Tim: Because of the less frequent episodes, we're now more comfortable going out to dinner, going to see more movies, playing more golf.

Carol: Because of the lessening of the crying, I just have a certain comfort level.

Carol: I would say to anybody that thinks that they could potentially have PBA is to not give up hope. If your symptoms are not matching how you feel inside, it's time to take the next step; keep doing the research, keep talking to your doctor, don't give up. There is hope.
